I'm a huge fan of Beato and don't mind what I've heard of Ekman, but neither of these tracks are as good as I expected them to be after seeing these reviews. Side A has a heavy drum part and everything builds pretty well, not to mention how mean the descending line is that comes in nearing halfway. The raw aesthetic Beato has with a lot of his music often works really well and gives a strong sense of drive, but I feel this time that it simply causes parts of the song to become pretty unenjoyable. The bassline starts to get trumped towards the end as the resonance of the first noise just becomes overwhelming, making it a definite eardrum blower if played on a system but not for a good reason. Side B is ok, but that's it... Starts off sounding pretty big, the bassline added isn't anything special but it's also not bad, though the wonky bell-like noise in the back starts to sound a bit nauseating after hearing it for most of the song.

B side is ok? It's an absolute beast of track, people always ask me what it is when I have played it out. One of my favourite records of the last 5 years.

Minnai

edit: nvm

krot

there's a copy of this available in store at idle hands for a good price - be quick

Kemath

there will be a Breaker 1 2 remix on Ekman in the future

sorry homie. Berceuse Heroique doesn't do repress...

Lost Python

TOTAL BOMB!

komandante

It's good to know some people are still making techno. I don't know about any hype, but this is the the real deal.

Nafyn

don't believe the hype..
